Invest to make a difference

From finding a cure for cancer to discovering the genetic triggers for Alzheimer's, these big challenges demand a new approach to long-term, sustainable research funding. Since 2000, American Century Investments has already provided more than $1.7 billion* through dividends to biomedical research into gene-based diseases – while consistently providing growth opportunities for investors.

American Century Investments (ACI) has a very different ownership structure, with the Stowers Institute for Medical Research holding more than 40% equity. This means, every year, more than 40% of ACI's company profits are paid as dividends to provide sustainable funding to the Institute – allowing scientists to focus on their research.

This means, through our strategic partnership with American Century Investments, your clients can help fund important medical research breakthroughs for life-threatening diseases, including cancer, diabetes and dementia.

Long-term, sustainable investment returns are also part of American Century's DNA, providing investors with capital growth opportunities while also saving lives. Looking for accelerating and sustainable growth, they identify global stocks with the potential to outperform.

For investors who like to think differently about investment returns, it's an opportunity to make a positive impact.

Performance impact

Operating for more than 60 years, American Century's investment approach actively looks for inflection points in business fundamentals; that moment where earnings growth accelerates. The aim is sustainable out-performance – and stronger returns.

With three options for investing in this strategy, you and your clients have the choice to suit their portfolio needs.

Positive Impact

ACI's ownership model is dedicated to making a difference in the world.

40%

Jim and Virginia Stowers endowed more than 40% equity in ACI to Stowers Institute for Medical Research to ensure viable, long-term funding revenue.

The Institute's breakthrough treatments include c.novyi-NT, which can eat away at tumours without destroying healthy tissue, and BVD-523, which targets a genetic vulnerability.

Generations of impact

- Cancer is the leading cause of death in Australia, with one in two Australians diagnosed by the time they reach 85¹
- Almost half a million Australians live with dementia, and it is the second leading cause of death²
- Around 1.7 million Australians have diabetes, and it is Australia's fastest-growing chronic condition³

The Institute's biomedical research seeks to understand the genetic mechanisms underlying life-threatening diseases like these.

This gives investors the opportunity to change millions of lives – including those they care about most.
