Global Growth Share Fund

Fund Focus - October 2018

Fund commentary

Global stocks fell in October on concerns about slowing economic growth in Europe and China, higher US interest rates, and the prospect of increased global trade barriers.

The Fund declined in October and trailed a weak index. An underweight exposure to Consumer Staples and an overweight exposure to Communication Services were areas of relative weakness at the sector level. Calendar year-to-date the Fund remains modestly ahead of the index.

Positive contributors in October included MarketAxess Holdings and B3. Shares of electronic trading platform operator MarketAxess Holdings were lifted by higher trading volumes and stronger-than-expected third-quarter earnings. The company's revision to full-year guidance also supported stock gains. Financial exchange operator B3 saw its stock rally along with the broader Brazil equities market following the election of Jair Bolsonaro as the country's new president. President-elect Bolsonaro is viewed as pro-business and good for the economy.

Key detractors at the stock level included Tencent Holdings and Stanley Black & Decker. Tencent, the HK-listed gaming and social media company, traded lower in response to increased regulation in China, where the government is taking measures to curb video game addiction. Against this backdrop, Tencent suspended and delayed the release of several of its games. The investment team continues to believe that advertising revenues will be a significant driver of growth for the company, as it is in the early stages of monetising its vast social media user base. Stanley Black & Decker traded lower after management provided soft guidance for 2018 as higher commodity and tariff-related costs, as well as foreign exchange pressure, reduced the company's profit view.

Purchases in October included Unicharm, a manufacturer of diapers and feminine products. Demand for the company's products is being driven by strong secular trends such as an aging population and a growing middle class. The company also has the ability to expand profitability through operating leverage. Unicharm is the dominant player in many Southeast Asian markets and remains a strong player in the "premium" segment in China.

Liquidations included the position in social media company Facebook, as user engagement and user growth continue to deteriorate. In addition, the investment team believe Facebook's ability to increase advertising load per user has peaked. While the company is still able to offset these maturing trends with higher pricing, the added pressure of rising expenses has led to reduced conviction in the stock. The position was reduced in March and this completes the sale.
