

Binding Death Benefit Nomination

Zurich Master Superannuation Fund

As a member of the Zurich Master Superannuation Fund (the "Zurich Fund"), you can choose whether or not to make a binding death benefit nomination. Where the Trustee has consented to your nomination, your benefit will be paid as a lump sum or pension to the person that you have nominated as long as your nomination remains valid, and has been made in the required manner.

Why should I make a binding death benefit nomination?

The main reason for making a binding death benefit nomination is for certainty. It enables you to nominate exactly who gets your super. This will result in more efficient estate planning and can prevent disputes over your death benefits.

Who can I nominate?

For your binding death benefit nomination to be valid, each nominated beneficiary must be your Dependant as defined below, or your Legal Personal Representative (generally the executor of your will or the administrator of your estate).

Definition of Dependant

A Dependant includes:

- your current spouse (including de facto spouse) of either gender,
- your children of any age (including adopted children, stepchildren and your spouse's children),
- someone who is financially dependent on you, or
- someone with whom you have an 'interdependency relationship'

Two people have an 'interdependency relationship' if:

- they have a close personal relationship; and
- they live together; and
- one or each of them provides the other with financial support; and
- one or each of them provides the other with:
 - domestic support and personal care, but not if one of them provides domestic support and personal care to the other under an employment contract or a contract for services or on behalf of another person or organisation such as a government agency, a body corporate or a benevolent or charitable organisation; or
 - support or care of a type and quality normally provided in a close personal relationship, rather than by a mere friend or flatmate.

Two people also have an interdependency relationship if they have a close personal relationship but they do not meet the other requirements of interdependency because:

- due to either or both of them suffering from a disability including a physical, intellectual or psychiatric disability, or
- they are temporarily living apart.

Important: A Dependant must be alive and meet the definition of Dependant immediately before your death. If a nominated beneficiary is not your Dependant or your Legal Personal Representative, the portion of the benefit to be paid to that nominated beneficiary will be paid as if there is no valid binding death benefit nomination.

What happens if I don't have a valid binding death benefit nomination?

You are under no obligation to make a binding death benefit nomination.

Where there is no valid binding death benefit nomination, the Trustee must pay the death benefit (or applicable proportion) in accordance with the trust deed provisions in force at the time of your death. Currently, this generally means that the benefit will be paid to your Legal Personal Representative, unless the Trustee:

- is unable to identify your Legal Personal Representative within 6 months of the Trustee being notified of your death; or
- has reason to believe your estate is insolvent

If either of the above applies, benefits are instead paid to your spouse or, if none, children in equal shares (where there are more than one). For example, if you have no spouse and two children, both children would receive 50%.

Note that a person is only a 'spouse' or a 'child' if the Trustee is aware of the person's existence and is satisfied of their status as such. If there is no spouse or child, then the Trustee must pay the death benefit to your Legal Personal Representative (even if the estate is insolvent) or deal with the death benefit under applicable laws relating to unclaimed super.

What about my will?

Your will relates to the distribution of any assets that form part of your estate. Therefore only that portion (if any) that is payable to your Legal Personal Representative (either as a nominated beneficiary or in the circumstances stated above where there is no binding death benefit nomination) will fall under the direction of your will. If you have nominated your spouse or children to receive part, or all, of your superannuation monies, then this money will be paid to the individuals directly and will not form part of your estate.

This means that if you wish to change the manner in which your superannuation money will be distributed you may need to request the Trustee change your nominated beneficiaries. It may not be sufficient to include alternate instructions in your will as this money may not form part of your estate.

How to set up a valid binding death benefit nomination?

To set up a binding death benefit nomination you must:

- be a member of the Zurich Fund;
- complete this nomination form and send the original to the address shown
- if you are a new member you will also need to complete the application form in a current Product Disclosure Statement (which can be obtained from your financial adviser or by calling Zurich Customer Care on 131 551).

For a valid nomination to be set up:

- the proportion of your death benefit to be paid to each beneficiary must be clearly set out (and total 100 per cent);
- the nomination must be signed and dated by you in the presence of two witnesses, both of whom are over 18 years of age and are not nominated to receive a benefit;
- each beneficiary you nominate must be your dependant or your legal personal representative; and
- the Trustee must receive and consent to your nomination.

Note: A nomination only applies to the death benefit payable under each particular insurance product you hold in the Zurich Fund. Therefore if you hold multiple interests in the Zurich Fund, each with respect to a different insurance product, any subsequent nomination in respect of an interest revokes a prior nomination in respect of that interest only - which may mean you need to make multiple nominations.

Once I make a binding death benefit nomination, can I change it?

Yes you can. Over time your individual situation may change (eg you may marry, enter a de-facto relationship, have a child or someone you have nominated has died) so it's important you ensure your binding death benefit nomination remains current at all times.

You may revoke or change your nomination at any time by completing a new death benefit nomination form. It will come into effect once the Trustee has consented to it and will then completely replace all previous nominations.

Do I have to re-nominate every three years?

Superannuation law gives specific instructions on when a nomination is binding. One restriction on binding death benefit nominations is that they are only valid for three years. This is to ensure that your nominations stay up-to-date with your current circumstances.

You must confirm your nomination every three years in order for it to remain valid. You can do this by giving us a written notice, signed and dated by you, to that effect before it expires, or simply complete the confirmation form we send to you. It is your responsibility to ensure your binding death benefit nomination is confirmed before it expires.

If, after three years, you do not make another binding death benefit nomination, or reconfirm your nomination, your original instructions will no longer be binding and the trustee will distribute as though there is no valid binding death benefit nomination in place.
